DOZEN OF HER KIN FIGHT UNDER FLAG OF GREAT BRITAIN

Janesville Lady Has Twelve Relatives Distributed Throughout World Under British Jack.

Mrs. Mildred Cooper, 345 S. Bluff street has twelve relatives fighting under the British flag.

Her only brother is a Captain in the Royal Engineers Corps now in France. One of her sisters has four children with the troops, two sons and two daughters, both Red Cross nurses, one in a base hospital "Somewhere in France" near the firing lines, the other in a hospital in Paris. Of the sons one is with the cavalry under General Maude and took part in the capture of Baghdad. The younger brother enlisted in October 1915 being then only 18 years old. Left England for France November 8, 1915. He was in the trenches for nine months, taking part in the battles at La Bassée, Festubert, Loos and latter near Verdun. At the latter he was a comrade who was his chum, was shot and badly wounded and he carried him to a place of safety.

For this the youngster was commended by his colonel for bravery and sent to Scotland last September and after four months training was promoted to first Lieutenant and given a leave of four weeks. He was recalled and sent with his regiment to the Mesopotamia and he also took part in the capture of Baghdad.

In a letter recently received from the only sister in England wrote that the only sorrow she and her husband felt was that their other two sons age eight and ten were not old enough to go to their country's aid. Two more daughters have joined the Red Cross this year.

In a letter written by another sister, (whose husband is also with the troops) dated February eleven, she said they were not yet suffering or in need of food and that a year ago they had given up all luxuries, one better than another. Every family who could do so in the city where she lived, as well as other towns had from three to five Belgian refugees in their homes, which would in time make it hard, but for humanity sake they must do it. She wrote "You would not know there was a war, every thing is so quiet but with a sadness."

"The people were very determined and every foot of ground that can be used is being planted and the ability parks is being plowed up and crops planted. The prayer of all is that God will give them an abundant harvest."

Since the Kaiser declared for his unrestricted submarine warfare Mrs. Cooper has received two letters which have successfully passed through the restricted area.

DENTAL INSPECTION WILL BE NEXT WEEK

Teeth of School Children in Public and Parochial Schools Will Be Examined.

The annual dental inspection will be conducted on Tuesday and Thursday of next week, April 10 and 12, at the public and parochial schools, according to arrangements made by Miss Agnes Webber, who is in charge of the work this year. Twelve of the dentists of the city will conduct the examination, counting their services. They are Drs. Sillig, Duggan, Hart, Holsapple, Leary, Looftberg, Peirce, Powell, Thuermer, Whitford, Wolcott and Woodworth of each individual case and will be forwarded to parents.

CROP REPORT AND WAR SEND WHEAT HIGHER

[BY ASSOCIATED PRESS]
Chicago, April 7.—War and prospects that the government crop report would indicate winter wheat was at the lowest point in the history of the country, rushed wheat values last week way above previous top records. Excitement was at times at a high pitch, which expanded into immense proportions compared with a week ago. Advances ranged from nine and three-quarters to twelve cents a bushel, corn gained a half cent and five-eighths to one and three-quarters to three and one-quarter cents, and provision forty-seven cents to $1.15.

STATE FINDS JAIL THOROUGHLY CLEAN

Only Minor Recommendation Regarding Paint on Floor—Advices Purchased of Canvas Cots.

According to a communication from O. E. Porter, superintendent of the state board of control, the Rock county jail under the regime of Sheriff Bob Whipple is in an excellent condition. The building has been thoroughly cleaned and renovated and the only objection state inspectors have been able to discover was poor paint on the first floor. He advised that the jail has gone over and also recommends that Sheriff Whipple call the attention of the county board to the recommendation that the present canvas cots be replaced with three dozen new ones.

Sheriff Whipple has just finished such a thorough cleaning as the county basile never before received. Over two entire months were required to place it shipshape.

Taking up the cue of a county board member while the supervisors were in session in January that deplorable sanitary conditions existed, Sheriff Whipple, at that time already engaged in his house cleaning, in fact he started the work as soon as assuming office on January first, and he added his "forter" more so than formerly. The building from cellar to garret is now fit to house a king.

In the Land of the Czar

A STORY OF RASPUTIN.

(By Paul Holmes.)

CHAPTER SIXTEEN.

Rasputin Pays The Price.

Rasputin glanced at his

It was seven o'clock. His and then he turned to the in less than half an he would be whirling away in his private carriage to the palace of the Czar, where a great banquet would be held that night. The and empress would be there, and he would be the guest of honor.

Quantity and

and the fashion of was Rasputin's

instead of the all evening long

sult of crimson velvet, modeled somewhat after the fashion of the eighteenth century. Gold and lace were in a vogue everywhere. His legs were covered by white silk stockings, and his hair, for one was well powdered. Truly, here was a man who belonged to another time and another age.

The wait which ensued was not unpleasant to Rasputin. He had many things to think about. There was work to be done that night, too. Slowly, the monk was working upon the feelings of the Czar, and before the other week he knew that Nicholas would ask Rasputin to resign the priesthood. Craftily, the imper was rebuilding the walls which L'Verne had crumbled the door flew open. One of Rasputin's trusted servants stood without, and with arm raised in salute, announced, "The carriage is here, sir."

Another smile stole over the face of the fanatic. He brushed an imaginary speck of dust from his clothes and arose. Then he walked to the door and passed out into the night.

His mind was occupied in thinking of the alluring pleasures which the evening would present.

And so, Rasputin, the all-seeing, the mystic, the man from whom noting could be hid, walked innocently into the trap which had been set for him.

How was he to know that L'Verne, his prisoner, was free? How was he to know that Franz Teschden, his trusted servant, as Usipoff's spy, was he to know that Rodzianko, Usipoff, and all their adherents had voted for his death. Long years of experience and constant triumph had convinced him that he was invul-nerable. What was there to tell him that the fates, who had piloted him to the highest pinnacle of fortune, were planning strange moves that night?

His carriage awaited him. He stepped inside the door, and as it closed behind him, his mind was tranquil, and his spirits high.

But hours before, things had been happening. Events were taking place all unbeknown to Rasputin. Wiesbaden, the trusted spy, had engaged L'Verne as the monk's footman. And, while the carriage was being put in shape for the evening's ride, the two had planned carefully what was to happen.

While the deluded Rasputin waited in his palace, Francois had climbed to his seat beside the driver.

At the same time, outside the palace, a group of men, including Wiesbaden, had secreted themselves in the shadow of a group of trees near the driveway.

And if those trees could speak, they might tell a strange story of what happened that night. They might tell of how the carriage approached, on its way to pick up Rasputin, and how, as it passed into the shadow, there had been a struggle. The driver's seats might tell of how L'Verne, victorious over the driver, had held the man motionless while figures sprang about the carriage, and Wiesbaden, attired as the now helpless driver, took his place upon the seat, while others bore the body of the unfortunate man away.

All this, the trees might tell, but they could not know the reason.

Even so, besides the plotters, they were all who knew that when Rasputin's carriage stopped for him outside his palace door, his driver was a man who had sworn Rasputin's death.

At any rate, they kept their secret well, and the wily monk suspected nothing.

With horses at a gallop, the carriage turned out into the road, and moved swiftly along. Inside, Rasputin reclined at ease. He took great breaths of the cool night air, and felt strangely exhilarated. He thrilled with the enjoyment of it all, and waited impatiently for the arrival at the Countess Ignatiev's. He thought the night rushed the carriage. The air was clear and cold; it had been snowing, and the moon was white, glissened on the sheet of snow, and he played his cards and lost. Dominating Russia, he wished to dominate the world. Who can say that his punishment was not justified?

With a gasp, the horses came to a standstill. L'Verne sprang to the ground and opened the door. Rasputin stepped out, and looked about him for his guard of armed cavalry which he had accompanied him on his rides.

It was nowhere to be seen. He could not know that his personal guard had galloped off merrily behind him, leaving his palace. Usipoff had planned (things well).

Instantly he suspected something amiss. He was on his guard. Yet he uttered no word. L'Verne ushered him to the walk. He approached the door, and when he mounted the steps, he must have seen what was in store for him. For his guard remained standing at the foot of the steps.

The door was opened. Rasputin entered. About a table were grouped a number of stern-faced men in evening dress. The blood rushed to the monk's face as he comprehended everything. He set his teeth grimly and waited. It was not the first time he had faced danger.

Usipoff arose and approached the man they had tricked. He held a revolver in his hand. His face was set in grim lines, which did not relax when he offered the gun to Rasputin.

"Take it," he said, "and kill yourself. We have decided that you must die."

There was a deathlike silence. Rasputin knew that his fate rested on the actions in the next few minutes. He was being given a chance. He took the gun and examined it. Then slowly he turned it upon himself. His other hand stole to his hip. Then with the quickness of light, he whirled the door. Another weapon was in his hand. He turned both on the assembly of men.

There was a crash of shattered glass as the great pane in the door behind him fell in pieces to the floor. Simultaneously the report of a gun was heard. The revolver which Rasputin had drawn fell to the floor from a nervous hand. His wrist had been broken by a bullet.

The hammer fell upon the other revolver, the one which Usipoff had given to the monk, but it fell upon an empty chamber. There was no result.

And it was not until then that the men saw what had happened. L'Verne standing on the walk without, had depicted the monk's movements, and had fired through the glass pane in the door, thereby preventing him from firing the gun which he had secreted upon his person. Usipoff, tearing open his breast, had given Rasputin an unloaded gun.

The next moment every man present had drawn a revolver and fired from their seats. Rasputin fell, riddled by a dozen bullets. Usipoff stepped forward, and bent down to the fallen man.

"Rasputin is dead," he said calmly.

A storm had blown up, and dark clouds at intervals obscured the moon, and when it did find an open path to shine through, it cast lurid shadows upon the snow. A wind was blowing which promised soon to become a gale, and it caught up the fakes and carried them viciously across the snow. Out near the middle of the frozen Neva, a hole had been cut in the ice, and the black water could be seen surging beneath it. The hole was just large enough to admit the body of a man.

Thus came Rasputin, the mystical, the unfathomable, his end. He was the master of Russia's destiny.

For years he had ruled the destiny of Russia and the Russians. Had he been honest in his politics, or had he placed his power would have been unlimited, but he was a victim of ambition. He played for still more power, and he played his cards and lost.

Dominating Russia, he wished

that his punishment was not justified?

Prince Usipoff gripped the hand of Francois L'Verne heartily.

"We have won," he cried, "Russia is safe. Pro-Germanism is behind us.

The dark influences are out. Rasputin is dead. Sturmer is disgraced.

Our victory is complete."

"Complete," echoed L'Verne, "and my work is done. Until Rasputin is dead, do not leave Petrograd. Lloyd-George told me. But now Rasputin is dead, and I can go back to France."

A faraway misty look appeared in his eyes. "France!" he murmured,

"Dear France!"

"You go back with our earnest gratitude," said Usipoff. "You have acted as becomes a man. You have accomplished things which will make France prouder of you than we are prouder of her. Lloyd-

George and Brand must have a great reward in store for you indeed, if they intend to repay you."

L'Verne withdrew his hand softly, and looked up at the man before him.

A sudden wave of home sickness swept over him. He wanted to be home. He did not think of the glory he would receive for the deed he had accomplished. Great things, but he wanted to see the land of his own

France again.

He had come into the country of the Russians, saved it from a disastrous and disastrous peace by his own personal efforts, and rid it of the influence which would bring further danger. He had saved the made good the trust placed in him by his supporters.

He was satisfied.

(THE END.)

According to English scientists, electricity passed through timber when freshly cut makes it more resistant against decay and fungus growth.

Ford THE UNIVERSAL CAR
There is little need of entering into detail concerning the merits of the Ford car. Their value both as a pleasure and a commercial vehicle is being demonstrated daily by more than two million owners. It is sufficient to say that even had you five times as much to invest in a motor car, you could not purchase one from which you would realize any greater or more genuine pleasure and substantial service.
Let us emphasize this one thing—If you are contemplating the purchase of a Ford this season, either a pleasure or delivery car, it will be a decided advantage for you to place your order with us immediately.

(SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.)
Madison, Wis., April 6.—The administration bill for a state council of defense to co-operate with the governor and the national defense council in the war crisis made its appearance in the house today. The council will be composed of twelve members, including representatives of the manufacturing, labor, farmer, woman, engaged in Red Cross work or relief societies, physician, banker, representative of railroads, trained engineer, adjutant general, two citizens from the state at large and the governor as an ex-officio member. The members of the council shall be paid $5 a day and traveling expenses. This board shall co-operate with auxiliary boards in cities, towns and villages and may employ expert assistance in gathering information on the resources of Wisconsin that can be used in waging war. After the members are appointed, they shall assemble at Madison and elect a chairman and an executive secretary. If at any time the investigations of the board shall show that there is a deficiency in the state through the lack of resources, the council shall report this matter to the executive, who shall call a special session of the legislature and have the food and fuel supply of the state and have it distributed so as to eliminate want. The state council is specifically directed to co-operate with the national council. All members of the council shall be subject to the audit and supervision of the state, whether contributed by the state or by individuals as subscriptions. The bill appropriates an unlimited amount, not more than $10,000 can be expended by the council at one time, except by the express approval of the governor. The bill gives the state council complete check on the resources of the state.

The Car That Built Overland Big Four $850
Light Six $985
The Overland Big Four continues the famous 35 horsepower Overland which made this institution the second largest automobile concern in the world—in eight years.
It is the same comfortable, roomy, powerful, rugged car that for years has outsold all cars which now sell for more than $400.
Its brand new body design makes it more attractive than ever.
The wheelbase is 112 inches and it has long 48 inch cantilever rear springs.
We believe it is the most comfortable, the easiest riding car to be had for the price—$850.
It is as clearly as ever the excess value car of its class.
And the Overland Light Six is likewise the excess value car of its kind.
Most of the body and chassis parts of the Light Six are the same as those of the Big Four.
So the Six shares directly in the economies of the combined production of fours and sixes.
These cars exemplify with great clearness the excess values made possible through the economies effected by our huge production of the most comprehensive line of cars ever built by any one producer.
Ask us to show you the Big Four and the Light Six.

Be thorough. Don't confine your improvements to the exterior of the home alone. You only see the exterior from the outside, and at least some members of your family spend more time within the home than without.

Of course you must freshen up the exterior with paint when it needs it—it's good for the house as well as for the public eye, but you should have a thought for the interior as well.

A few pieces of new furniture distributed through the various rooms now and then, will keep the interior up-to-date, comfortable and attractive not only to the entire family, but to that portion of the public eye that you admit to the privacy of your homes.

An Attractive Cottage—By John Henry Newson

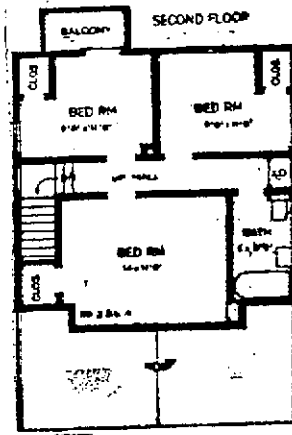

This is a modification of No. 236, which has been illustrated in a former issue of this paper. The exterior is in lap siding with asphalt shingle roof; foundation is in brick.

The living room and dining room are finished in oak, kitchen and attic in yellow pine and second floor in white enamel.

Floors are of oak. The house is heated by a hot air furnace and bath-room equipped with porcelain fixtures. The basement has stationary wash trays, fruit room, coal bin, etc. This house will cost from $1800 to $2500. Size 24x24 feet.

Inquiries of Gazette readers addressed to "John Henry Newson, Homes of Character Department, The Gazette," will be given Mr. Newson's prompt attention. Always give the number of the home concerning which inquiry is made, and, as the service is free, the inclosure of a stamp for reply will be appreciated.
